Now new notifications You'll get updated when important things are happening, and when you engage with our community. Android: If you're tired of typing SMS messages on your tiny Android keyboard while sitting right at your computer, free app TalkMyPhone will forward those messages to your IM client, so you can reply without even picking up your phone.Whilst you can always forward SMS notifications to your PC, TalkMyPhone allows you to take action on those messages as well. TalkMyPhone sends you notifications of incoming SMS messages, phone calls, and battery states via Jabber, meaning you get the notification right from Pidgin, Adium, whatever other IM client you use. You can then reply to SMS messages by simply responding to the IM, putting reply: before your message.Android and Mac/Windows/Linux: If you don't want to deal with your phone while you're at your...Read moreThere are a few ways to use TalkMyPhone; I prefer to use two separate accounts: my standard Google Talk account, on which I'll receive notifications, and a separate Jabber account set aside from which my phone can send notifications. So, I recommend heading over to jabber.org on your PC and creating an account specifically for your phone. Once you do, make sure your phone's account and your personal Jabber or GTalk account are authorized to talk to one another—and set the following preferences.Address to your Gmail address or personal Jabber accountUse a different account: Check this option>Login: Enter your phone's Jabber passwordThen head into Additional Settings and make sure your Server Host and Service Name are both jabber.org. Your Server Port should be fine at the default 5222. Lastly, go back to the Main page and start the TalkMyPhone service. Now, when you receive an SMS or phone call, you should get an IM from your phone's Jabber account. You can reply to the message as well as send SMS messages to other contacts, make your phone ring if you lose it, even have your Google Talk contact ping you when it's located. Check out the documentation for a full list of commands.

TalkMyPhone is a popular privacy-focused encrypted messaging app. It's an alternative to WhatsApp, Telegram, Facebook Messenger, and others. There's a lot to like about the app, and if you make the switch, it can even replace your SMS app. Like its competitors, Signal is mainly used for instant messaging other people who use the app. However, the Android app has an extra feature: It can act as your device's default SMS message app. Unfortunately, the functionality isn't available on iPhone.

Not only will you be able to communicate with your Signal contacts, but you'll also be able to send and receive text messages from your phone to anyone. All of your conversations can be in one place. Let's take a look at the warning messages sent through Signal are "insecure," meaning they're not end-to-end like those between Signal users. First, tap the three-dot menu icon in the top right corner of the Signal "Settings" screen. Tap "Check for updates" to see if there's a new update. Tap "Signal" at the top of the screen. Then tap "Use as default SMS app." A prompt will ask you to choose your default SMS app. Select "Signal" and tap "Set as Default." That's it. Sending an SMS message is the same as sending a Signal message. Contacts not using Signal will appear with an SMS label. If for whatever reason you would like to send an SMS to a Signal contact, you can do that, too. Start by tapping a message like you normally would. This time, instead of tapping the send button, tap it and hold. Now you have the option to switch to "Insecure SMS." As previously mentioned, SMS messages are not encrypted like Signal messages. The send button will now be gray with an unlock icon. Tap it to send the SMS message. You'll notice that the send button itself is now a blue circle with a white dot. Tap it again to cancel the message.

Keep in mind that you will not be able to access SMS through the Signal Desktop app.

It's all very exciting having the latest version of Android installed on your mobile, but what happens when it makes changes you don't actually like? That's the situation one of the most basic, reliable and unchanged features of any phone, with even the most backward of tech users usually able to work out how to send a simple text message.But in Hangouts? Even experienced smartphone users struggled to work out how to send a simple text. Not only that, the term 'hangout' is a dreary, predictable piece of brainstorming nonsense. So if you fancy rebelling against Google's forced use of the Hangouts app and going your own way, here are five alternative SMS apps to install and bring texting back to basics on Android.

Plenty of customisation options await in this Android SMS app, with Hello SMS letting users choose if they want a standard fancy-focused or a minimalist clean look. The design is pretty jazzy, with a list of SMS threads down the left, plus a wider layout when viewing your texts in landscape mode. Replies are threaded, albeit in a subtle, bolded highlight way, and it's a fast, simple app to open and use. A long-press on the message icon lets you delete an entire conversation, while the attachment option is a swish combined gallery and camera app, splitting the screen between existing shots and a viewfinder for capturing and attaching live shots.

Handcent SMS Handcent's been around for a long time on Android, and it shows. The design's not particularly thrilling, offering a white and blue colour scheme that looks like it's been ported from iPhone. Still, beneath the chunky layout there are absolutely stacks of features in Handcent, with this texting app letting users add doodles to messages as image files, attach screen captures of the phone's display, spellcheck messages before sending and, if you have a clear non-regional accent, input text via Google's speech-to-text tools.

The sending of messages can even be scheduled, if you need to establish a watertight alibi. It's a proper hardcore texting app for people who use their 3,000 SMS allowance each month. View this app on the Play Store

EvoSMS

EvoSMS does all-out on design, with a stylish layout that incorporates a swish landscape option, multiple font and text size options. Emojis and more. A nice pop-up reply box makes responding simple, plus there's a pattern lock and the ability to set some conversations to private while leaving others unrestricted, and a choice of Home screen widgets. You can also snooze incoming text message notifications for a set period of time, in the unlikely event you've got something better to do than look at your portable telephone. And as nice as it looks, the appearance can further be amended by installing themes and other customisation packs.

ExtraText ExtraText bravely claims it's a "beautiful" texting app, and, if you like Android's old grey, boxy layout, it probably is. To make it less pretty there's a custom Textra Emoji plugin that can be downloaded for free, if you like expressing yourself via silly emoticons, plus there's a built-in audio recording tool, for sending people clips of you speaking when typing's too much of a chore. In terms of customisation, there's much to play with. It supports pop-up message notifications, the changing of the notification LED colour (if your phone supports it), with users also able to customise the pulsing of the notification vibration – for the ultimate in stealth text alerts.

TextSecure

TextSecure has a bigger selling point than the rest: security. On a basic level it restricts Android from taking screenshots of messages, plus, if you demand more control and reassurance that the user/government isn't reading everything you say, there's the option of locking the app down with a passphrase. And, for yet more protection, conversations between two users can be kept private with end to end encryption. In terms of customisation, TextSecure delivers some fun consumer toys, with SMS delivery report tools, LED colour and blink pattern toggles for at-a-glance notifications, enter key modification and more.
